I want to know that is there any way to extract x64 plugins from Waves - Complete v10.7.2019? I've been searching about this problem for a couple of days and seems like there's no answer. What I have done : used Pulsar Audio Mu v1.1.5-R2R to extract x86 plugins. checked that there is no x64-plugins folder in Waves folder. when I try to extract x64 plugins form the downloaded zip, it's giving some errors Thanks in advance. A: First, you get the x86 version by running: curl -O "" Then you unzip the file and put the x86 folder in your vst folder. It works fine if you put it in the Audio folder. There are some UI problems as the plugins are not organised like the mac version. Q: What is the best way to allow a user to download a file from a view? I'm currently working on a project that is running in a Sharepoint 2010 environment. I am using Webdav to serve files from my IIS server to users on the web. I'm wondering what the best way to allow a user to download a file is, from a specific view. For example, I have a view that shows information about the work being performed by our craftsmen. The view shows a header information about the project, and then a list of dates. Each date indicates when a craft will be at a certain location. I want a user to be able to click on a specific date, and download the file for that date. Which method would be the best to accomplish this? A: If you want to go a little different route: You can create a "Download File" action in your IIS web server that would either pass the file to the browser or use a "SaveAs" action in your MVC and serve it back to the browser in an associated view. Let's say you have a view called ViewX, that you expect users to interact with. Controller public ActionResult ViewX() { var file =... // Get the file to download return View(file);
