By Daniel J. Kaspi Staff Writer WASHINGTON – A request for U.S. protection of the Polish military from a Soviet invasion has prompted a major debate on Capitol Hill over whether America should intervene or not in a European crisis. That issue, as well as the role of the United States in NATO, are also topics of growing concern to Poland as it looks ahead to a free-trade agreement with the Soviet Union and other developing economic ties with East and West. With Russia declaring that it will withdraw its forces from the Baltic states, the Soviet Union now sees Poland as the most likely buffer state between itself and NATO. Foreign Policy magazine reported that a 40- to 50-page report drafted by the Strategic Studies Institute of the U.S. Army War College and the National Defense University argued that Poland should be considered the United States' main strategic interest in Europe. The report proposed that the United States draw up contingency plans to guarantee Poland's security should the Soviets invade or threaten to attack. Other parts of the report pointed out that the Polish military, despite recent modernization, is far weaker than that of other NATO members. The plan also suggested that the United States should set up a bridgehead of Polish forces in the region to prevent Soviet units from moving into Poland. The proposed bridgehead should have a strong air wing to take on Soviet aircraft in that region and be ready to repel the expected Soviet ground forces. The United States should also provide a security zone around the bridgehead to ensure the safety of members of the Polish Army operating in those areas, the report said. The report's recommendations of a contingency plan for Poland reflects the increased emphasis on Eastern Europe since the shift of the communist government in Warsaw away from its West European allies, the report said. The report, sent to the Pentagon last week, cited current U.S. support of Polish forces in the Middle East and Northern Ireland as examples of the need to reinforce Poland's defense. Other NATO allies, fearing potential Russian pressure, have also sought a free-trade pact with the Soviet Union and other Soviet bloc members. The United States has made clear

I am very new to Python. I have this project that requires me to get some data from an external URL. I need to parse the XML data from the external URL and store it in a string and then print it. Here is what I have so far. url=" the_page = urllib.urlopen(url) print (the_page.read()) I would like for the print statement to simply print out the XML file I am pulling from data.com/BusinessInfo.xml. How do I do this? Thank you A: Read your XML file and then write the data to a buffer variable. Then when you are done with that write the data to the file. import urllib2 xml_data = None url = " the_page = urllib2.urlopen(url) # Read your XML file into a string xml_data = the_page.read() # Write the XML data to a file with open("filename.txt", "w") as f: f.write(xml_data) print xml_data Question: I recently bought a 2014 NOOK for my wife that, like my Nook, she had had since it came out several years ago. I checked the software it came with and decided to wipe it and reload to a system that I had bought. I did this via the box that came with the unit. It took over 24 hours to reload the new OS. My question is, how can I do this faster? Both the Nook and the Win 7 system were connected to the internet When you say "box that came with the unit", do you mean the Nook that she had "purchased"? Is that the box of the Nook she bought several years ago? Do you mean that you did it to the Nook she has now 595f342e71
