We present a direct comparison of the BOLD signal response before and after administration of naloxone, a drug which abolishes the analgesic effect of opioids, on fMRI activation during tonic contraction of the right and left rectus femoris muscles. In contrast to previous reports, we find only a small (2-4%) change in the signal increase during activation. Despite this small magnitude of change, naloxone was found to abolish the signal reduction during hyperaemic muscle contraction. Thus BOLD data from naloxone-treated subjects can be included in the 'dynamic hyperaemic response'.Reduced surface area of the haemochorial placenta and leukocyte surface area in human fetal growth restriction. Evidence suggests that leukocyte adhesion is important in the regulation of placental haemodynamics. It is therefore important to be able to quantify and compare leukocyte populations in normal and abnormal pregnancies. To investigate whether there was an increase in placental leukocyte infiltration in human fetal growth restriction (FGR) we investigated the number, surface area, size, and area of distribution of leukocytes in the placental intervillous space from 20 uncomplicated pregnancies and 12 pregnancies complicated by FGR. There was an increase in placental leukocyte infiltration in growth restricted pregnancies although there was no difference in the number of leukocytes. This increase could c6a93da74d
