Lock out Computer While working Hi. I have to use Firefox Mobile, Thunderbird, and Google Chrome on my laptop. I am able to log into Gmail. Sometimes I have to lock my computer so I can continue working. I can't find anything in Firefox or Thunderbird that will allow me to lock my computer or turn off the monitor. Can you please tell me how to accomplish this. Thanks. A: It is possible but I would suggest you to always use an OS with a standard mouse and keyboard. I see no reason to get frustrated when one day you need to use an external keyboard and mouse to control your laptop. Whenever you leave your house for any length of time, make sure that the keys of your external keyboard are in a state that is most comfortable to you. When you go to lock your device, you will want to make sure that your external keyboard is not plugged into your laptop. When you are ready to lock, unplug it from the laptop. Once you unplug the external keyboard, your mouse cursor will move. This may be a little disorienting at first but you will get used to it and not have to worry about it. You can also reposition the external keyboard to one corner of your laptop screen in a position that allows you to reach it without moving your laptop. This will reduce the possibility of you accidentally touching the keys on the external keyboard and messing up your work. A: Firefox and Thunderbird's shutdown options are the top right corner icon, with a cross inside a circle. Clicking this should bring up a menu with a cross icon top right (or on a mobile device). Select "Lock screen" from that menu. Takashi Toi is a Japanese musician best known as the singer-songwriter of the band Zazen.
