1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a method of and an apparatus for making wet wipes from recycled flexible thermoplastic sheet materials. More particularly, this invention relates to a method and apparatus for making wet wipes for personal hygiene and other uses, for example, cleaning underarms or other parts of the body with soap or lotion. 2. Description of the Related Art Wet wipes are marketed today for a number of applications. Wet wipes provide consumers with an easy, convenient and pleasant way to cleanse or treat a surface area of the body such as the skin, lips, eyes or other mucous membranes. Wet wipes also provide a means of cleaning the skin in situations where a person is not able to reach or use soap. Soap is used in personal care products, such as the bath and shower, because it removes oil and grime from the skin without stripping moisture from the skin's surface. However, soap is not very effective for certain cleaning or skin treatments such as the treatment of skin irritations and rashes. Lotion is more effective than soap for the treatment of rashes or other skin irritations. The use of lotion or other cleansing products is normally limited because of the thin, dry material that is typically applied to the skin with a cloth or cotton ball. The thin, dry material requires that the user keep trying to make contact with the skin to keep the lotion or other cleansing product from running down the skin. This is both inconvenient and not very effective. The user's lack of success with keeping the lotion or other cleansing product on the skin often results in the lotion or other cleansing product running down the surface to be cleaned or treated. In response to this problem, wet wipes were developed for use with lotion and other cleansing products. The wet wipes were provided in a bundle with an attached wet wipe applicator. The wet wipe applicator would have a round, cylindrical shape. The applicator would include a plurality of holes. The bundle and applicator could then be used in conjunction with the lotion or other cleansing product. The consumer would dip the wet wipe applicator into a container holding the lotion or other cleansing product. The consumer would then retrieve the wet wipe applicator and wipe the lotion or other cleansing product onto a desired surface such as the skin. Because the wet wipe was soaked in the lotion or other cleansing product, the lotion or other cleansing product would not run down the user's skin. However, the consumer had as MBS described this operation as an appropriate use of military might and implied that Turkey would retaliate. According to a report in the daily newspaper Döşemealtı Haber Ajansı on September 11, 2019, the Turkish government has sent 1,200 military personnel and 70 cargo planes to the area, reportedly to join the operation there. Since early November 2019, Turkey has begun to provide its border with Syria anti-aircraft artillery to defend against a possible Russian attack on Turkey. Locations of reported Turkish military operations Operation Eagle In February 2020, Turkey deployed its warplanes and special forces along the border with Syria for the first time since the Operation Euphrates Shield in 2017. Turkey claimed that its forces conducted several strikes against the Syrian Democratic Forces in Syria. The Turkish military also stated that it attacked over 20 Syrian Kurdish positions near Ras al-Ayn, Tal Abyad and Tal Hamis, all in northern Syria. Turkish media reported that Turkish forces were also in the city of Manbij in the north of the city, with Turkish officials saying they opened fire on a group of unidentified assailants who tried to attack the military and civilians from the border. Turkey confirmed five of its forces have died since the operation began. April 2018 According to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights (SOHR), Turkish forces launched a cross-border operation, named "Operation Olive Branch", in the Jarablus–Euphrates river valley on 20 April. On 26 April, Turkey bombed SDF positions in the village of Azaz after SDF fighters opened fire on two Turkish military vehicles in the area. On 29 April, Turkey shelled SDF positions in Jarablus. On 27 May, Turkish-backed forces entered Jarablus, capturing most of the town with the exception of the Bab al-Nasra neighborhood. Operation Olive Branch 2 The Turkish military launched a new cross-border operation in the Jarablus–Euphrates river valley on 5 June 2018 in retaliation for the attack by

SDF forces on 30 May. It began simultaneously with an offensive operation by the Syrian National Army against the Islamic State in the region. Both sides conducted multiple air raids, and clashes between the Turkish-backed forces and SDF ended on 9 June.
