Rhino 5 SR4 Full x86 and x64The Secret Symbol of the CIA For more than 80 years the CIA has secretly used a secret symbol to identify its agents. So secretive was the use of this symbol that only a handful of intelligence officials in the agency and in the media know that this symbol is in reality not even a symbol, but simply the word "Yes". The CIA is famous for its black and white photomontage that represent doubles, played by men wearing black and white suits. It features a triangle pointing up, hence the name "Triangle", which has been used to identify the secret organization by the British since WWII. During those war years the triangle was first shown with a dot instead of the letter Y. According to the CIA's cryptographer, the symbol was derived from the conventional photo cipher and was meant to indicate that the photograph was just one of a group used in the accumulation of intelligence from one or more agents. According to a former CIA agent, the symbol was devised in the 1920s by the CIA's predecessor the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). At that time the OSS used "Yes" in an OSS file produced by its German-language section. Later this method was simply adopted by the CIA. The CIA's famous photomontage featuring two silhouetted agents wearing black and white suits and a fake window in the camera. The word "Triangle" is hidden on the frame just above the fake window. The symbol has sometimes been confused with the word "Yes" written backwards. The agent pictured in this case took the photo himself. The original OSS file from which the symbol was supposedly derived reads: 'This photograph confirms one of the agreed plan (CIA) for the appearance of the OSS Camera that is used to photograph "Question and Answer". The "yes" in the window means that the photograph was taken this morning. There is a wide variety of methods for delivering the photograph, but the Bureau [CIA British counterpart] should be informed in advance of the delivery method.
